JAMES A. SMITH PROMOTED.

Former Middlebury Marble Man Appointed Consul-General.

James A. Smith, well-known to many people in this locality through his connection with the marble industry, has received further promotion in the consular service of this country which he entered about 1896 when he was appointed consul at Leghorn, Italy. President Wilson has transferred Mr. Smith from the post at Genoa, Italy, where he has served a number of years as consul general to Calcutta, India. He will hold the same rank at Calcutta which is the most important consulate in India. As consul general he exercises certain supervisory powers over all the consuls in India.

Mr. Smith, a few years after being sent to Leghorn was transferred to Boma in the Congo Free State in Africa where he served for a few years as vice and deputy consul general and it was from that post that he went to Genoa. Mr. Smith, who is about 50 years old, came to Vermont from Michigan when a young man to manage what later became the Smith & Brainerd Marble company at Beldens. The company's quarries were located in Pittsford. While Mr. Smith was identified with this company he made his headquarters at Middlebury.
